

What we do for better future?

We know that we don't protect our environment so much. But there are a few things that people do to have a better future. We ask some people for a new survey what they do for our environment.

According to a survey people who live in villages have used clothes lines more than people who live in city. A large number of people have used energy efficient light bulbs, so they help our environment and their budget, too.

We can recycle many different materials, so we ask people what material they have recycled. Most people have recycled plastic. Less people have recycled paper and only a few people have recycled aluminium.

To be "green" we should buy local food from farmers, not from supermarkets, because big producers use chemicals which are harmful to our health and environment. But food from local farmers is more expensive, so only a few people have bought it.

This survey shows us that people do something for better future, but they should take care of environment more.
